

Ryan Castledine

Ryan Castledine, 07700 900729, ryan.castledine@example.com, based in Warrington and happy to travel. Regional sales manager with eleven years selling into the licensed trade and grocery channels, currently responsible for a 14.6m territory and a team of seven field account managers.

I joined Northlake Beverages Ltd in April 2021 as regional sales manager for the North West and have been there since. The patch was doing 11.2m when I took it and closed last financial year at 14.6m, which was 118 per cent to target and the strongest region in the business for two years running. I run seven field account managers and two telesales heads, and I own the P&L for the region including promotional spend of about 900k a year. The things I am proudest of are winning the Halbrook Inns account, which was a competitor stronghold for nine years and is worth 2.1m annually, and rebuilding the journey plans so that call rates went from 5.4 to 8.1 a day without adding headcount. I also sat on the national pricing committee and pushed through the change to volume-tiered rebates that the finance team had been asking for since 2019.

Before that I was at Ardenway Packaging Group from July 2017 until March 2021, first as a key account manager and then as senior key account manager from the start of 2019. I looked after eleven national accounts worth 6.8m combined, renegotiated the two largest contracts on improved margin at a point when raw material costs were moving weekly, and brought in three new logos in the ready meal sector. I was the account lead on the tender that won us the Craythorne Foods contract, a three-year deal worth 2.4m, and I wrote most of the submission myself.

From 2014 to 2017 I worked at Verity Trade Supplies as a territory sales executive covering Greater Manchester and Cheshire, growing the territory 31 per cent over three years and finishing top of the national league table in my second and third years. I was promoted to senior executive in 2016 and given the two largest independents on the patch. Before that I spent two years at Kelmscott Office Solutions in a straightforward new business telesales role, 60 calls a day, which taught me more about resilience than anything since. That was 2012 to 2014.

I studied business management at Brandthorpe University and graduated in 2012 with a 2:1, having done a placement year at a drinks wholesaler which is what got me into the trade in the first place. Since then I have done the ISMM level 4 diploma in sales, a Miller Heiman strategic selling course in 2019 and an internal leadership programme at Northlake across 2022 and 2023. I am comfortable in Salesforce, have used HubSpot and Pipedrive at previous employers, and build my own territory reporting in Excel and Power BI because the standard reports have never told me what I actually need to know.

On a personal note I am 34, hold a full clean driving licence, and I am looking for a national accounts or head of sales role where the ceiling is higher than it is where I am now. I can be flexible on notice, which is currently three months but negotiable. References are available from my previous two employers and I would rather my current employer was not contacted until an offer is on the table. I coach an under-11s football team on Saturdays and completed the Manchester half marathon in 2024 in 1 hour 52.
